

Alkali Patches And How To Treat Them

One of the most insidious problems with which a large number of the farmers of southwestern Manitoba contend is the increasing prevalence of alkali patches in cultivated fields. Experiments at the Experimental Farms indicate that both chemical fertilizers and barnyard manure give relatively higher response on these slightly saline patches than they do on the more fertile portions of the field. While these treatments are beneficial, they do not constitute a cure and it is probable that many of these areas will become worse in the future.

The fundamental cause of the accumulation of these alkali salts at the surface of the soil, is the evaporation of salt-laden waters. The salts are dissolved in the water as it passes through the soil and are re-deposited at the surface when the moisture evaporates.

The use of forage crops in rotations with cereal crops can do much to reduce the hazard of salinity because forage crops assure that all water entering the soil is used. A two- or three-year rotation of fallow and cereal grains does not always assure this during moist years.

Forage mixtures help to prevent run-off and the occurrence of local ponding which is the source of these salt-laden waters. Increasing the organic matter content of the soil by the use of forage mixtures also increases the water-holding capacity of the soil and thus tends to prevent the movement of excess salt-laden water through the soil.

Warn Farmers Wild Animals Have Rabies

DRUMHELLER, Alta. — Farmers and ranchers in the Beynon and Drumheller districts have been warned that a skunk and porcupine—unless they have since died of rabies inflicted by a fox—are still loose in the area, and a menace to livestock and other domestic animals.

The fox was beaten to death with an iron bar by Joe Shatt on his farm three miles north of Beynon. The animal attacked a large dog. The dog apparently escaped rabies infection.

Confirmation that the fox was rabid was received here. District agricultural S. Pettit said he has warned farmers and ranchers to be on the alert for other rabies-infected animals in the area. The sick indications are that the fox had fought a skunk and porcupine before being killed.

WHAT OTHER PAPERS ARE SAYING:

William Bobby, Point Lake farmer made a good paying round on his field recently, while going the oneway — he turned up the wallet he lost while harvesting last fall. The hundred dollars and papers the wallet contained were not harmed by their six months stay under the snow. — The Western Review, Point Lake, Saskatchewan.

THE LITTLE TOWN
I like to live in a little town. Where the trees meet over the street.

And hear the friendly gossip Of the folks that live next door.

Our lives are intermingled. With the friends we come to know, And we feel their joys and sorrows, As we daily come and go.

Yes, I like to live in a little town, And I care no more to roam, For every house in that little town Is more than a home; it's a home.

It is a positive delight to meet a man you feel you can trust," remarked the individual with the high forehead. "Oh, I don't know, I prefer a man who pays cash," replied the man who kept the grocery shop.

An estate agent bought his little girl a beautifully furnished doll house, and on his return after a week's absence asked her how she liked it.

"Oh, it's very nice, Daddy," she replied.

"But where is it, Betty?"

"Oh, I rented it furnished to Cousin Jill for a quarter a week."

Dinah had been having trouble with an ulcerated sore on her nose time before she got up enough courage to see a dentist. The moment he touched her tooth she screamed at the top of her lungs.

"What are you making such a racket for?" demanded the doctor. "Don't you know that I'm a painless dentist?"

"Well, ash," retorted Dinah, "nabbe' you's painless, but simply isn't."

Funny and Otherwise

"Ladies and gentlemen," shouted the street performer, "in a few moments I will astonish you by eating coal, stones and nails. I will also swallow a sword, then I will come around with a hat, trusting to get enough for a crust of bread."

SAVING A LIFE....

BY ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION BACK PRESSURE-ARM LIFT METHOD

EACH year many people are the victims of asphyxia. A few are saved because of the prompt action of some bystander. Asphyxia need not always be fatal and in an effort to save lives the Canadian Red Cross Society, First Aid-Swimming and Water Safety Society, has supplied the following information in regard to artificial respiration.

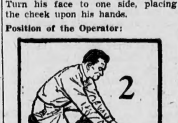

If breathing stops because of drowning, choking, sedative poisoning, gas poisoning, suffocation, or polio-myelitis, start artificial respiration immediately. Don't delay—seconds count. As soon as possible, send someone for a physician. Have other helpers wrap victim in blankets, apply artificial warmth, remove wet clothing and act as relief operators. The standard technique for the Back Pressure-Arm Lift method is as follows:

Position of the Subject:

Place the subject in the face-down position. Bend his elbows and place the hands one upon the other. Turn his hands one to each side, placing the cheek upon his hands.

Position of the Operator:

Release the pressure, avoiding a final thrust, and commence to rock slowly backward. Grasp the subject's arms just above his elbows, and draw his arms upward and forward you. Apply just enough lift to feel resistance and tension of the subject's shoulders. Do not bend your elbows, and as you rock backward the subject's arms will be drawn forward you. Then lower the arms to the ground. This completes the full cycle. The arm lift expands the chest by pulling on the chest muscles, arching the back, and relieving the weight on the chest. To maintain a steady, even rhythm the operator should apply pressure for 2 seconds then lift the arms for 2 seconds. Count timing can be followed by touching One Thousand and One Thousand and Two-thousand start lifting

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY

DEEP WITHIN MY HEART

By LEIGH HAYDEN

MAUD HAWKINS lifted one of the apples from the pan and smelled it. Heaven! It took her back to childhood, the happiness of which, in memory, was more real to her than the tragedy of her married life. She smiled as she thought of her borders—and of what her friends would say if they knew she was matchmaking again! But these two were just made for each other! Steve, a grocer, a widower—the home-town type. And Ann, a stenographer. But what a pair they'd make! Good-looking! Steve tall, dark, always smiling. Ann, blue-eyed and blonde. Both were wasted his time at Ann's home. Maud around, helping her in the garden, when he might be getting acquainted with Ann.

Maud sliced the apples into the lemon juice covered with sugar and cinnamon, put the top crust on, and popped the pie into the oven. Time to start dinner!

As she pushed a load of brown hair off her forehead, a thought struck her. She felt in her apron pocket. No, it wasn't there! What had she done with it? She was in Steve's room darning when the idea for the greening cake came to her and she sat on his bed to Steve it down. And then the 'phone had rung. Maybe she could remember it. She'd like to get it and some others in the party to a greening cake company. Fifty cents a line added up to quite a bit! How did it go?

"To My Secret Love," "Deep within my heart I hide Dreams of you right by my side. Won't you, by your written sign, Let me know that you're mine?" That was it.

The war-lane used by medieval knights was about 16 feet long.

She heard Ann's light footsteps on the stairs, going up to her room, and soon Steve came in and went up.

At dinner, watching her to study Ann, Maud excused herself and left the room. "I was talking into buying these two tickets to the Puyallup Fair," she said, as she came back, and I can't go. It's a shame to waste time. Tomorrow is Sunday. Why don't you take my car and drive over?"

"That's sweet of you," said Ann. "I think it'd be fun!" But Steve shook his head. To Maud, he said, "You need a change. If you'll go, I'll drive you both over. So I'll get it."

Next morning, Steve seated himself behind the wheel of the car, suggesting a hattering tone to Maud, who was climbing into the back seat, that he thought the ride would be more enjoyable if she sat by his side. "Oh, no, I want Ann to sit up there. She'll get a better view of the country. I don't think Ann's been to Puyallup before."

But just then Ann came running down the walk. "I won't be able to go to the Fair," she said, breathlessly. "I've just got a phone call, and I have to meet someone coming in from Tacoma."

"Maybe I'd better stay home and cook dinner for you and your company," offered Maud.

"Oh, no, you go on," Ann answered. "Steve, with a worldly-wise look, grinned at Ann, then said to Maud, 'If we go are going to Puyallup alone, wouldn't it be less formal if you sat up here with me, Mrs. Hawkins?'"

Maud moved into the front. Steve paid strict attention to his driving, and Maud could think of anything to say. This hadn't worked out right. She had to figure out some way to get the two together.

Then she remembered she needed one more greening cake verse to send with the batch tomorrow. Out of her purse she drew a pad and pencil, and was soon writing furiously. "Apple pie recipes," Steve asked. "No," she said, "greening cake verse." Steve burst into a hearty laugh. "So that's it," he said, "all the time I thought it was meant for me!"

"Deep within my heart I hide Dreams of you right by my side," he quoted. Maud's face turned crimson. "Where did you get that?" she asked.

In the hall, in front of my door, I was sure who let it there for me," said Steve.

"Oh!" said Maud, the picture of mortification, "I must have dropped it when I ran to answer the phone."

Maud was so embarrassed, wondering what Steve was thinking, that most of the displays at the Fair were wasted on her. Once she blurted out, "I really intended Ann should be with you today. Don't you think she's a lovely girl? She'll make somebody a fine wife!"

"Yes," said Steve, "that's what the fellow who was coming over from Tacoma thinks."

Maud, trying to cover her confusion, said, "Look at that beautiful Jonathan apple display!"

By the way," said Steve, "that was a mighty good pie you made last night. Jonathan, weren't they?"

"Yes," she answered. "You know," said Steve, "I think I'd be right nice if we bought a couple Jonathan apple trees and planted them in the back yard. In a few years we'd have all the apples we needed for pies. The ones we couldn't use at home, I could sell at the store."

When they went home that night, there were two Jonathan trees in the back of the car.

AUTOMOBILE has the above and some 35 others, are operating in Canada today (mainly in Montreal and Toronto) because of a group of men have combined nostalgia and a love of mechanics to keep the automobile past alive. They have handed together the Duster and Goggles Club. There are three clubs in the United States made up of men dedicated to rebuilding and preserving the pioneer automobile models, but the "Duster and Goggles" is the only such club in Canada. While these men have the standard early models—a French Delahaye Wagonette, built in 1903; a 1902 Rambler, the forerunner of the present-day Nash; a 1905 Cadillac which took two years to rebuild and now runs like an expensive watch—their main aim is to find and rebuild early models of Canadian cars.

JACK RABBIT ATTACKS TRUCK

CALGARY, Alta. — A rabbit attacked a three-ton truck. Coal miners Gus and William Wik said they saw the 12-pound jack rabbit cross a road ahead of them, then rear back and "attack" their truck.

It missed, and the force of its charge carried it into a field beside the road.

Then the overcast bunny tried again. It leaped high and crashed through a closed window of the cab. One of the Wiks grabbed it and threw it to the floor of the cab where it died.

Veterinarians said the rabbit apparently was maddened with rabies.

The Wiks were treated at a hospital for possible rabies infection.

REGINA—The increasing need for safe farm practices is emphasized by figures on 1952 farm deaths reported by the Division of Health Education, Saskatchewan Department of Public Health.

According to a survey of accidental deaths in Saskatchewan conducted by the Research and Statistics Division, 104 farm residents died in mishaps occurring in farm homes, farm yards and in the fields last year. This represents an increase of 20 farm deaths compared with the previous year.

The survey, carried out in connection with the provincial department's Home and Farm Safety Program, revealed that 49 per cent of all accidental deaths in the province in 1952 occurred in Saskatchewan homes, both urban and rural, and on Saskatchewan farms.

As in 1951, tractor accidents continued to head the list with a total of 30 farm persons killed. Of these 13 deaths occurred in tractor accidents under tractors, gas-fume explosions and mishaps with power take-offs.

Pires to farm homes, out-buildings, and in fields, ranked second in causes of accidental death among farm residents. Last year, there were 20 deaths in farm fires of a total of 26 deaths in the province as a whole.

In 1951 the farm fire toll was 22 of a total of 34 Saskatchewan farm fatalities.

Harvest accidents involving combines, swathers and threshing machines were third cause of farm deaths last year with accidents in farm homes next in rank. The latter included fatalities occurring in falls, children scalded and drownings.

In spite of the increasing mechanization of Saskatchewan farms, accidents with horses caused 10 deaths last year. Grain augers, balers and silos were responsible for seven deaths.

Other farm fatalities included accidents with firetrucks, drownings in wells, creeks and dugouts, motor vehicle accidents in the yard and fields, electrocutions, sunstroke, smothering in wheat and a fall from a windmill.

Ranchers Find Wolves Costly

WEEDS, Sask.—Wolves continue to take toll of purchased livestock on the P.V. ranch here. The owners, George and Arthur White, estimate each $10 bounty for a wolf killed actually means $200 in relation to livestock saved.

"Old Three Toes" Famed Grizzly Of Rockies, Felled By Scribe

VANCOUVER.—Old Three Toes, British Columbia's No. 1 mad grizzly, is dead.

Leo Straight, outdoor editor of the Vancouver Sun, told of his one-shot kill of the eight-foot, half-ton brute. He wrote:

"My bear came into its meal—a rotten, stinking, fly-blown, winter-killed mouse—before dark on the second night and I no sooner recognized him than I shot and made him a trophy that I'll be proud of all my days."

By his side for the northland kill on the banks of the McGregor was Walter J. Henry of Vancouver and Prince George, sportsman hunter. Another companion and experienced hunter was Chuck Ennis, Henry's business partner, six-foot-three, ex-Tennessee.

Leo was perched in his "blind" when the notorious Three Toes showed up on a tumbled-in forest dark.

"I trembled—vibrated in a better word."
